PIERILLE, par Jules Claretie, de l'Academie Francaise-Paris: Dentu. New-York: J. W. Bouton. PERIL, par Henri Greville. Paris: Pion. New-York: J. W. Bouton.

"Passionnetie," which "Gyp," better known as the Comtesse de Martel, has selected as the title of her most recent and most clever novel, is a word which will be sought for in vain in French dictionaries. And yet it is both a pretty word and one which is singularly expressive. It may be defined as the diminutive of the French word it passion," or passionate love. of the world-a mere superficial scratch on the heart as if with the point of a needle. But yet trifling as it is, "Gyp" is convinced that these scratches often prove fatal, and result in the death of the fair ones to whom the hearts in question belong. It is with a view of proving this to be the case that she has related in her sual inimitable and sparkling manner, so thoroughly wislan, the "passionnette" of the Comtesse Aurelane pineer named Marcel Prevost, whose recently pubned novel, "La Confession d'un Amant," proved the unfortunate tone of the ordinary French novel. ice, far from debasing the mind of the reader, is calcuatch rather to elevate it. Its strongers not reader, and which clings to him until the last page. It is the plain, unvarnished story, exquisitely told, of a young nan whom principle and devotion to the two venerable and saintly old ladies who have brought him up from tations to which Parisian life exposes a young In the hands of a less gifted writer the story, as it is, would have inevitably degenerated into wrought as it is, it has come as a refreshing and cooling traught to paintes jaded by the realistic and so-called forth at any rate a momentary and possibly a lasting elevation of mind. It may be added that M. Marcel ost's book has been made the subject of several ducal family of des Cars-who was chieved a place in the foremost rank of the Nieves" is furnished by the fact that it appeared riginally in the pages of the "Revue des Deux Mondes." is a tale which cannot fail to attract the attention readers who are tired of realistic and psychological studies. The scene is laid in Spain, and the book chronicles in a peculiarly dainty and refreshing man-ner the loves of a champion torero and Dona Nieves del Rio, a sweet maid of Seville, whose character is as my as the skies of her native Andalusia.

and bearing the title of "Le Prince Imperial." It not only furnishes convincing proof of the illegitimate also demonstrates the pernicious and even sinister while on the throne and when in exile, of a far more powerful hand and more trenchant pen than that of the Count, and quite a number of pages he late Prince Napoleon, more familiarly known as factory explanation is given of the latter's attitude toward Eugenic during the Empire, and of his undly conduct toward her after the death of her shand and son. It relates the difficulties which Prince Imperial, and the financial embarrassenis of the latter due to the limited character of the allowance placed at his disposal by his mother. It deals likewise with the disappearance of valuable papers from Chislehurst, and after giving numerous details concerning the disgraceful intrigues carried on factory evidence as to the truth of the rumor according to which the Emperor's demise was due, not to the effects of the surgical operation to which he was subjected, but to an overdose of chloral which he was forced to take sorely against his will, and that plunged him into a sleep from which he never awoke.

The books by French authors suitable for the reading of young girls are few and far between, and the appearance of M. Claretie's "Pierille," therefore, merits a special welcome. It is a charming village idyl, showing the bright and sunny side of French peasant life without any indication of those sombre sindows which form so characteristic a feature of Emile Zola's reakstic novels. Realism in its offensive sense is entirely absent from this, the latest work of the eminest Academician and Director of the Comedie Francaise, and the attractions of the volume are further increased by a number of graceful illustrations.

"Peril" may be described as constituting one of the most successful efforts of the well-known author who writes under the pseudonym of "Henri Greville." The characters of Eliette and of her lover, Niko, are drawn from nature and form delightful portraits of two singularly attractive personages. While marked by "Henri Greville's" usual refinement and simple elegance of style, "Peril" displays more than ordinary force and power in its descriptions of Breton coast life and scenery, and the interest is maintained

EPPS'S COCOA. BREAKFAST—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakmet tables with a delicately flavored boverage which may save us many heavy dectors' bills. It is in the judicious use of euch articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to discase. Hundreds of subtle maiadies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly neurished frame."—Civil Service Gasette.
